Cursive Handwriting means 'joined up' writing. Children are asked to ensure that they include tails for each letter so that they can join their letters more easily when writing words. In most UK Schools, children are now expected to learn to write with joined up handwriting. Children are taught the formation of letters with the joining tails so that when they start to write words they can join them easily. Cursive Handwriting has been introduced as it is believed that children will more easily remember how to spell words due to the flow of the writing.
