Hot Tamale Baby Charles F Breaux

Jack Broussard retired as a New Age guru and Past Life therapist to the Olympic Peninsula; within the year his French wife divorced him and both his parents died. Jack turns to the local Cajun dance and music scene for solace after his mid-life crisis, which in turn leads to a road-trip to dance-halls of Louisiana and his Cajun roots. He meets Liz before leaving and invites her to join him on his odyssey. Liz calls it a sentimental journey when they visit places Jack lived en route to a Cajun festival in the Bay Area -- Jack's old stomping grounds. Liz can't dance; she jumps ship and Jack descends into 'Jack's Inferno' in Fellini-like flashbacks to his good ole' days, poignant and humorous, stalked by the ghost of True Love. Floundering in the Bay Area dance-scene 'urban camping' in his mini-motor home Jack meets Gita and tricks her into a past life regression to a life when they were lovers to open her heart. Gita doesn't go for it and Jack learns his house and property back home have burned to the ground. He has a meltdown and hatches a scam to get 'crazy' money by committing himself. He's in for a big surprise and his folly fits him like a straightjacket several sizes too small. While searching for a way to escape from the loony bin he begins having OBE's to a future life as a woman.

Jack is a psychonaut and his worldview is 'out of this world.' Some say Jack is a know-it-all or a paranoid conspiracy theorist. Liz says he's brilliant but crazy; Gita is suspect. Jack Nicholson is one of his role models and he quotes Bob Dylan relentlessly. Some might claim Jack's story is science fiction; Jack would bet on if "it's you or him that's insane."
