How do you tell your best friend you're a vampire? And how do tell him you think you're a serial killer?

Andre Delacroix has lived a relatively normal existence. He's a respected doctor, friend to one of the best detectives in Los Angeles, Reece Daniels, and can walk in the daylight, which assists his masquerade of being human. He's about to ask the woman he loves on a first date. Everything in his life is perfect.

Until a series of teen murders leads Andre to believe he could be a vicious killer. Whoever it is kills like a vampire, but with one distinct difference. An ability only he and a handful of immortals share, but they are in Europe. And his lucid dreams point to him, so who else could it be?

When Reece heads up the murder investigation, he is drawn into a strategic game of cat and mouse: no clues, no DNA, and no suspects. Who is behind it? And when evidence comes to light who will it point to?

Is Andre committing these gruesome murders, or is something far more sinister lurking in the shadows of this all too real nightmare?

He and his team have been monitoring the intensified Lycan activity in the city, and he has a bad feeling it's linked to the disappearances. If what he believes is true, time is running out for the missing teens.

After weeks without any leads, Detective Charlotte Delaney enlists Reece's help to solve the case, before the department's window of opportunity closes indefinitely. It may have already, but she won't give up. The kids' lives depend on it.

Reece is pleased to be working with Charlotte again, and finally admits to himself that he cares for her and wants to protect her from the horror he's exposed to. Charlotte is unaware of his extracurricular PI activities and he wants to keep it that way. He knows he can't hide the truth from her forever, but he will until there's no other choice.
